Adobe provides an extensive and valuable beginner Photoshop tutorial package, called the Adobe Photoshop CS6 beginner's kit. The first version, released in 2010, provides lessons on how to import, select, and manipulate files. Photoshop CS6 introduces new features such as the ability to work with images in a virtual-reality format, and it introduces layers, which allow you to edit layers individually. Photoshop Elements is a free program, originally released in 2005, that provides much of the same power and flexibility as Photoshop. It lacks some of Photoshop's most advanced features. However, it can be useful if you need something basic to work on those files that don't work in Photoshop and want to learn the basics in a less expensive package. Taking the First Steps

Photoshop has a number of tools and features available to beginners. To begin working with Photoshop, you must install it on your computer and give it permission to run. The current version of Photoshop is CS6; CS5 is available, but it was superseded by a newer version. If you don't have Photoshop installed on your computer, visit the Adobe web page at www.adobe.com/photoshop. On the site, click the Downloads and Products link, and look for the Desktop and Mac versions. Click the link for the download. If you don't see your operating system listed, the download is available for Windows or Macintosh. First, install the software, which usually requires downloading a.zip file. After that, you can unzip the file, which usually requires another software package. You must run the installation program once you unzip the file. Windows and Mac systems will have different instructions, but the process for the installation is generally the same. After the installation process, you need to restart the computer to start using Photoshop. To open the program: For Windows: Click the Photoshop icon on your computer's toolbar. For Mac: Click the Applications folder icon, then select Photoshop. After the program is open, you can either keep it open or choose to open new documents.

collection of programs that have become the standard for sophisticated image-manipulation tools. The advantage of using a full suite is that you get access to all of the tools, which include Photoshop and many other applications, free of charge. ## Photoshop CC 2014 Activator For Windows

Nissan launches a fuel cell test car: in a tongue-in-cheek video, the firm shows off the new generation Xterra, with the tagline "Blue-Eco-Revolution". Partly to promote its all-new fuel cell car, the firm launched a video comedy series on YouTube, to show off its rival. It is the first time Nissan has marketed its fuel cell vehicle, though the Japanese firm does make hydrogen-powered Leaf cars, as well as the Highlander and Juke. The Xterra fuel cell vehicle combines electric power with hydrogen-powered propulsion, and Nissan has begun building a range of fuel cell cars. Nissan and Toyota have said they plan to make 200 fuel cell cars a year between them, and will eventually make fuel cell cars to rival gas and hybrid cars. In a tongue-in-cheek video comedy series, Nissan shows off the Xterra - a new generation SUV - and claims it can drive for two hours on its electric power alone, with no emissions - unlike the Xterra predecessor, which could only travel around 10 miles on electric power. The new version can drive 650 miles on its battery, and will become increasingly popular in countries such as the US, China and Japan. However, other countries could face problems buying the vehicle, as vehicles with hydrogen tanks are relatively uncommon in those countries. Nissan claims the new generation Xterra boasts cleaner air as it runs on electricity and hydrogen, and is "the world's most efficient SUV". The firm says it can get between 85-88 miles from a single charge, and that it can drive for around 2.5 hours on electric power. In the video, an embarrassed man, formerly involved with car competitions, opens the vehicle, saying "you have to be looking forward to this... because no one has made a fuel-cell car with this technology". He claims the car is quieter, and says it is four times more efficient than a petrol-powered car. However, he realises that many people will not see what is actually environmentally sound about the car, and tries to convince the audience it will revolutionise the car industry. The firm initially planned to make 10,000 of the new cars, but that number has risen to 12,000. The new Xterra comes with voice recognition technology, which can be used to control its navigation and entertainment systems.
